

Your work-related phone calls can save you money on taxes. Here's how.

Not many people know that business related phone calls can help to save money on tax. The IRS allows tax deductions for work-related phone calls. So, if you use your cellphone for business purposes, then you can claim tax deductions for those expenses.

Do you use your cell phone for both professional and personal use? If so, then dedicate 60 percent of the phone calls to your business and the rest 40 percent of the time to talk with your honey and friends.

The IRS will allow a tax deduction only for the portion of the cell phone bill that is tied to your business. In your case, you can deduct 60 percent of your cell phone expenses on your tax return.
